About the imprisoned squatters

It's difficult begin to write this lines, trying to express. Explaining myself with the boundaries created by words, concepts and meanings its an impossible work, but I am facing it with one purpose. I wish this text is going to be useful for watching some points about our "issue". The imprisoned squatters.

I talk and write in my name. This lines are the result of a personal debate, of a meeting with my mirror.

Like happened in other moments, a part of our struggle, becomes a part of the mediative-judicial-policial show and we enter into "unknown" dimensions. The Spectacle World. It happened with the eviction of the Princesa Theater and it's happening now with the imprisoned squatters.

Aside the stroke we received, we see how we were and are stroked by several kinds of newspaper's headlines and by all that chameleonic opportunists that appear by magic art in the "alternative" scene. We didn't were only stroked by the police. We received another political or ideological stroke. It's difficult for us to locate in a stage were we finished being main characters and began to be puppets. It's difficult to see how little by little some threat are growing in our wrists and our movements look like manipulated, artificial. Maybe it's a lack on definition (What we are, what we want) because the true is that meanwhile lots of the people who are taking profit of our case are showing their label, that's difficult for us. Maybe it's fear, fear of be divided, because if we say that we are anarchists, we are going to be less people. It's cooler saying we are a Social Movement and, in this way everybody can be included, until the king because he is a part of a social movement, although that movement is the one which is smashing our head.

I don't want, from here, people who don't declare themselves as anarchist and chants loudly "A las Barricadas" stop going to the meetings. What I think is that sometimes we don't have clear ideas or we don't dare of expressing that ideas. In that sense we give to much importance to what the media are going to say, as if ever we had confidence with them or with the support of any party or sect. We can include the main line of the campaigns for getting a better public image of us (weren't We invisible?).

Claiming for the "innocence" of the retaliated it's usually the result of the stroke of those who talk about culpability, terrorists... It means we are following their stream, or in a better way, we are in their trailer. We must be serious and sincere also. WE PISS OFF ALL THEIR LAWS.
